

Paso Robles Food Co-Op plants the seed of 'community abundance'

■ Exploratory meeting slated for Tuesday, March 26 at Centennial Park

With more than 150 produce and products grown and crafted in North County — from grapes to soap, apples to olive oil — the reality of a Paso Robles Food Cooperative may not be far off.

Paso Robles Food Cooperative founder Montgomery Norton will lead an exploratory meeting on Tuesday, March 26 at Centennial Park in an effort to build upon his vision of "community abundance."

The group will discuss cooperatives, how they can benefit a community and what a local cooperative would need to get off the ground.

With a master's degree in urban planning from U.C. Irvine, 37-year-old Norton crafted the idea alongside girlfriend and fellow brainchild Erica Crawford. The core concept — centered on buying locally and supporting local farmers and craftspeople — comes down to common sense, according to Norton.

"Countless members of our community are not only growing, but are also hand-crafting jams, sauces, oils, wines, soaps and other products," he said. "When we buy our goods locally, we keep our money circulating in our economy, and we are able to purchase goods at a lower cost by eliminating distribution fees. When we shop daily at a co-op in our community, we are truly benefiting our family, our friends and our neighbors."

In other words, Norton said, "My intention is to create an organization that allows the most connections between the abundance of food that is grown here and the demand in San Luis Obispo County."

Norton said the region is fortunate to boast such abundance.

"Some areas in the country, you're limited to what you can grow," he said. "Here on the Central Coast, from San Miguel to Arroyo Grande to Cambria, there are totally different ecosystems. You can grow everything from citrus to avocado to hearty wheat."

Last July, Norton made the move to Paso Robles from Napa — another region abundant in crops and locally-crafted goods. However, Norton said accessibility was an issue.

EAT THIS WITH

Spaghetti Squash with Niner Sangiovese

NO PASTA HERE — With approximately 42 calories per serving, this winter squash spaghetti is loaded with nutrients, including folic acid, potassium, vitamin A and C.

Winery/Pretty Café

One of my weaknesses is my passion for pasta, breads and rice. Eliminating carbs is always a challenge, and I find myself looking for substitutes when trying to drop a few pounds.

A grilled portabella mushroom room can be a nice base for pizza toppings, a butter lettuce leaf can replace bread in a sandwich and quinoa is a very satisfying whole grain substitute for white rice. The greatest challenge is trying to find a tasty replacement for pasta — one with good flavor and an enjoyable texture. I have yet to find a whole grain pasta that doesn't remind me of cardboard.

The winning substitute for a pasta topped with a homemade sauce is spaghetti squash. The squash strands have a beautiful color, texture and the flavor is mild enough that it serves as an excellent base for just about any sauce. With approximately 42 calories per serving, this winter squash is loaded with nutrients, including folic acid, potassium, vitamin A and vitamin C.

The squash can be cooked a number of ways. I prefer to just place the entire squash in the oven and bake for an hour. Days when I am in a hurry, I cut the squash in half, remove the seeds and then microwave in a glass pan with water for 10 minutes.

Once cooked, the strands can be removed with a fork.

When it comes to pairing with wine, you really will want to pair with the sauce since the squash itself is very mild. My favorite sauce is one made with tomatoes, onions, mushrooms, garlic and plenty of herbs and spice. This Italian-style sauce begs for and Italian grape varietal, and one of my favorites is sangiovese.

There are several wineries who offer a delightful sangiovese made from Paso Robles grapes. One of my favorites is the 2010 Niner Sangiovese. The aromas include chocolate, wood character, cherry and cranberry. The velvety texture leads to a finish with vanilla, caramel and baking spices. This wine will pair well with a wide range of food items.

Fresh talent emerges at Young Savages art show

A fiercely creative cross-section of the Central Coast art scene will fly under-the-radar no more thanks to the Young Savages art show unfolding at Studios on the Park in Paso Robles this Saturday, March 2 from 5 to 8 p.m.

The emerging talent — age 17 to 38 or so — represent an artistic community underrepresented in county galleries and art venues, according to show curator and San Luis Obispo artist Neal Breton.

"These are young people, and they have fresh ideas and they have new ways to say old things," Breton said. "I feel like Paso is hitting a renaissance, and if that continues, [the area] will offer one of the very best opportunities for younger people. Young artists should start making the drive over the hill from San Luis Obispo."

Urban and lowbrow art, surrealism and suggestivism — as well as tattoo and street art aesthetics — will be on full display at the upcoming show. About 25 artists hailing from across the county — and a few from the Los Angeles area — will bare their souls on 15 by 20-inch canvases. Records spun by DJ Malik and home-brewed ale for the sipping round out the unique art experience.

"It is very much the DIY aesthetic being brought to Paso Robles,” said Breton. “There’s kids in high school doing pieces in the show and people ranging from graffiti artists to commercial artists doing this. It’s going to be a really interesting room and very interesting to see these artists come together.”

SAVAGES

The artist said he’s excited to carve out a home for alternative art forms over the grade.

If all goes right, Young Savages may provide that all-important foot in the door for a fresh crop of artistic individuals seeking a venue.

“Traditional landscapes and traditional ways of painting the landscape are championed in San Luis Obispo, where Paso Robles looks like it has more of an open mind,” Breton said.

Breton knows first hand: He’s shown his own artwork at Vale Fine Art, located in downtown Paso Robles. That venue, along with Pierce Modern Gallery and the Artery in Atascadero, are all part of a greater push toward artistic inclusivity within the county, he added.

Although some may argue “youth” to be synonymous with novice, Breton urges locals to take a closer look at the show’s long and illustrious roster. San Luis Obispo heavyweight Jeff Claassen of Claassen Gallery, mixed media darling Lena Rushing and eye-catching upstart Alister Dippner are all hardworking Central Coast artists who sell their work regularly, foster the local creative community and continually push the envelope.

As Breton so aptly suggests, “If you like what you see, support it.”

Studios on the Park founder Anne Laddon, along with program director Sasha Irving, certainly liked what they saw. Irving said a show like Young Savages has been a long time coming.

“A lot of these folks are coming from South County and coming from the larger creative community,” said Irving. “We are excited to provide a place for them, where they can be involved and introduce locals and visitors to their work. This is really going to showcase a segment of the artistic community that we haven’t seen in Paso Robles before.”

ABOUT THE YOUNG SAVAGES

The Young Savages exhibition will through March 31 with an opening on Saturday, March 2 from 5 to 8 p.m. at Studios on the Park.

According to organizers, “The word “savage” takes on several meanings — as a noun, it means primitive or uncivilized; as an adjective it describes an animal or force of nature; a verb weaponizes it into an attack. The Young Savages Collective defies conventional description. Some of them aren’t young (two are 38, and a handful more are in their mid-30s), and they aren’t really a collective in their grouping. Some of this “collective” has yet to cross paths, some prefer complete reclusion. The Young Savages are a loose collection of talented, ascending artists—some use skin as their normal canvas, some use walls, some are commercial in their wares and some prefer to show their work only to their close friends. Some have sold paintings for years and some are embarking upon their first show here at Studios on the Park.”

Artists include: Reid Cain, Neal Breton, Lena Rushing, Kyle Naylor, Lauren Buzzetti, Jason Hudson, Chris Daly, Isaac Yorke, Nick Wilkinson, Jamie Coxon, Jordan Quintero, Lisa Harrison, Drew Davis, Peter Ljepava, Erica Hamilton, Lakin Hamilton, SOAK, GWAP, Stenzskull, Ty Hjortland, Chloe Parks, Julian Calvillo, Alister Dippner, Beth Reninger, Scott Osburn, Eric Valdez and The Free Humanity.

must! charities debuts new site in effort to better serve families

Charity is 'eager to build relationships with local nonprofits,' organizers say

TEMPLETON — must! charities, a northern California organization dedicated to lessening the local effects of poverty, recently announced its newly designed, robust website: www.mustcharities.org. Crafted for simplicity and ease of navigation, the new site offers several new key features, including the ability to track progress of current projects, ideas for how citizens can get involved in the community, videos, donation opportunities and more. One of the most interactive elements of the new site is the option for community members to recommend nonprofits for future collaborations with must! charities.

"I am confident the new must! charities website provides the right information in a clear layout for visitors," shared Becky Gray, must! charities executive director.

"With an emphasis on the people who are involved — and those we are supporting — the content focuses on the impact our organization is making in San Luis Obispo's North County Region."

The core mission of must! charities is to collaborate with existing organizations for the purpose of lessening the effects of poverty, and the organization has invited the community to make recommendations for those relationships. Several steps exist for considered parties: Potential organizations are screened by must! charities to determine whether they effectively serve those living at or below the poverty line and meet community needs in the North County.

Screenings include site visits and interviews, analysis of outcomes and financial data, supplementary research and reference checks.

Submissions are accepted year-round, and final collaboration decisions will be made by the must! charities Executive Board of Directors on a bi-annual basis as funds are available.

To be considered for a formal collaboration with must! charities, those interested should review the qualifications and submit a request form.

The must! charities website also features a comprehensive press kit, details about the Executive Board and the Partner Advisory Board, as well as a list of current partners (donors). The current project with the Boys & Girls Clubs of North San Luis Obispo County is highlighted; read more from the original announcement here.

— 'Warm Bodies:' a zombie romance at heart —

Witty, original, moving and surprising with an upbeat message underneath

MATTHEW FOX
FILM CRITIC

'WARM BODIES'

(out of four)

By Matthew Fox
FILM CRITIC

"This film is funny and quirky, but I also liked its heart. It is the rare dystopian film that dares to suggest that things can get better and that love is the key." — Matthew Fox

But a funny thing happens.

As R eats Perry's brain, he starts to experience Perry's memories. This includes Perry's love for Julie (Teresa Palmer). When R spots Julie across the room he does something strange — he protects her.

Reluctantly, Julie decides to trust R and accompany him to his airplane home. While she can't explain it, she begins to see signs of life in the zombie before her. And R, as he starts to embrace what it means to be human through his connection to Julie, actually starts to reverse the effects of his condition.

The reawakening in R starts something among his fellow zombies, which leads to backlash from those unwilling to change. But that's not the only hurdle for this unlikely couple. Julie also has to convince her father — Grigio (John Malkovich) — the leader of the surviving humans that zombies really can change. That proves to be no easy task.

Some have said that love is the most powerful force in the universe. I think Isaac Marion, who wrote the novel that served as the basis of the film, and writer/director Jonathan Levine would agree. That is the premise at the heart of "Warm Bodies."

The film is witty, original and moving — and it's completely surprising. The film is told from the point of view of R, a zombie who struggles with his essence and life.

This film is funny and quirky, but I also liked its heart. It is the rare dystopian film that dares to suggest that things can get better and that love is the key. If "The Walking Dead" sees the world glass half empty, then "Warm Bodies" sees the glass half full. That's refreshing.

The film features good performances, doesn't linger on the gore too long, and offers a nice twist on the genre. It helps that it's kind of a charming story too. "Warm Bodies" is one of the most engaging new films to be released so far in 2013.

"Warm Bodies" has been rated PG-13 by the Motion Picture Association of America for zombie violence and some language.

Three stars out of four.

— Matthew Fox has been reviewing films for News Media since 2003. He currently lives in Colorado Springs, Colo. For more on his reviews of films, sports, and entertainment, visit his blog site at <http://highlandsmatt.blogspot.com>.

There are those who see the world as glass half full, and those who see the world as glass half empty. In terms of dystopian visions of the future — usually things don't get much better.

That is especially true in the zombie genre, where things seem pretty grim, has been pretty set. You basically have works that are like "The Walking Dead," which is as much a negative commentary on humanity as it is about the zombie virus that could destroy our future.

That's what makes "Warm Bodies" so refreshing. By now the zombie genre is well-worn territory. There is little variation to the stories — whether they be by the George Romero film variety of the previously mentioned "Walking Dead." Never has a zombie film been a romantic comedy that dared to suggest that love is the tonic that can cure even death — that is until now.

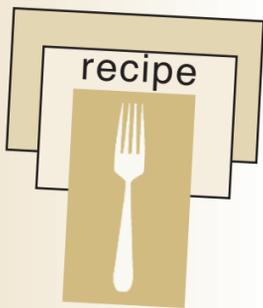

"Warm Bodies" is set in the future, where a virus has ravaged the Earth. R (Nicholas Hoult) is a vampire, but he doesn't want to be. He's not content with his lot in life, and his internal monologue — which serves as narration for the film — lets us know that he feels bad about what he's doing.

Still, R, along with his best friend M (Rob Corddry), and a group of zombies venture out from their airport home in search of food. When they find a group of survivors out gathering supplies, it's meal time.

SPAGHETTI SQUASH

■ After 30 minutes, turn squash over so it cooks evenly. After a total of 60 minutes, remove squash from oven and allow to cool for a couple of minutes.

■ Cut squash in half length wise and scoop out the seeds.

■ Discard the seeds, and then, using a fork, scrape the strands from the squash. Work from top to bottom.

■ Remove simmering sauce from stove top. Serve squash topped with sauce and garnished with green onions.

WHAT YOU NEED

- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1 small yellow onion, chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 1 pound of mushrooms, chopped
- 1 tablespoon dried thyme
- 1 tablespoon dried oregano
- 1 teaspoon dried chili flakes
- 1 28-ounce can chopped tomatoes
- 1 tablespoon tomato paste
- Salt and pepper, to taste
- 1 green onion, chopped (optional for garnish)
- 1 spaghetti squash

GET COOKING

■ In a large sauce pan, heat the olive oil and sauté the onion for 3 minutes. Add the garlic and mushrooms and continue to sauté until the mushrooms release their juice.

■ Add thyme, oregano, chili flakes and stir. Add the chopped tomatoes and bring to a boil. Stir in the tomato paste, season with salt and pepper then reduce sauce to simmer, stirring occasionally.

■ Preheat oven to 375F. Pierce the spaghetti squash with a fork 2-3 times. Place the squash on a baking sheet in the pre-heated oven.

CO-OP

“If you do have access to it, it’s super expensive, it’s limited quantities sold at limited times for people who have lots of money,” he said.

As for farmer’s markets, Norton said they serve a purpose, but they fail offer the convenience of a permanent, local cooperative.

“Farmer’s markets are awesome, and they can be a great event for the community and a way for people to get access to local [items]; however, they are more of a tourist option or showpiece than they are a way to get food to a family,” he said.

Norton painted a common picture: A busy mom and dad with two jobs, children and hectic schedules. They’re seeking fresh, locally grown food for everyday meals.

According to Norton, that’s where a local food cooperative would come in, providing fruits, veggies, meats and home items produced exclusively on the Central Coast.

Norton approaches the idea of a future Paso Robles food cooperative with both free-spirited optimism and a solid business approach.

“You can create systems within a business or organization that provide the maximum benefit for the community, and that is what I intend to do,” he said. “I aim to provide as much local produce as possible, in one location, and to provide as many opportunities possible — in connection with farmer’s markets and other businesses in the area — for people to gain access to local food.”
